My owners name is Maria Smith, and as she is a thrifty soul she has worked in white thread on the inside of my cover "Maria Smith's Umbrella." One ramy night as we were going home two ruffians stopped us. Seizing my mistress by the throat they snatched her pocketbook, her watch and me and made off into the darkness before size could support here.

Lost Umbrella, but Regained Girl.

Not many years ago I had a somewhat remarkable experience with an umbrella. I was then a lad of twenty, of course had a girl, who, contrary to the general rule, had a birthday (for you will remember birthdays are something girls seldom have). I felt it my duty to send her a token of my great regard, so selected for the occasion a very fine gold-headed um-brella, upon the head of which I had her brella, upon the head of which I had her hame artistically engraved. A few mouths later she to my great discomfort, met one she liked better than I. Being an honorable girl she at once made me aware of the fact by letter, accompanying which was the umbrella. I was so deeply hurt by the news that I had "From" engraved above her name and below the date on which she returned it. I little imagined the trouble this would cause; but trouble came which to me proved a loy. In a short while her affinneed, who was an old friend of mine, chanced to borrow my umbrella, and noticing the date of the engraving supposed her false, and, heart-broken, left the town, by which I lost my umbrells, but regained my girl.

gave the beggar a piece of silver.

How can you be so foolish?" cried a man standing by. "That man is no more lame than you are. Just lend me your umbrella for a minute, and I will convince you of what I say."

Quickly taking the umbrella from the gentleman's hand, he made after the beggar, who, throwing down the critiches, ran off as fast as he could. The other, amidst roars of lauphter from the bystanders, ran after him, menacing him with the umbrella, and so they ran on a
